13. ABSTRACT (Maximum 200 words)

This report describes the development and application of methodologies to identify cultural communication skills training requirements for Special Forces. Cultures (187) of operational relevance were identified and grouped into ten regions. A "generic cultural communication skills template" was developed to provide a structured taxonomy of the cultural information domain and the basis for culture-specific templates. Three culture-specific templates were developed, each describing a culture and identifying culture-specific behaviors that were prioritized through focus groups of cultural informants and clustering analysis. Mission templates were developed that identified and organized the elements of two missions. The mission elements were weighted by subject-matter experts using paired comparisons and ranking. A crosswalk related each cultural behavior to each mission element for three pairs of cultures and missions (Arabs of West Asia/Foreign Internal Defense, Russian/Unconventional Warfare, Cuban/Foreign Internal Defense) to generate a "preliminary prioritization of cultural communication skill training requirements" for each pairing. The report also describes the development and delivery of two programs of instruction based on the methodologies. The methodologies should improve the commanders' and training managers' ability to determine training requirements and to develop training specifically linked to mission requirements.

METHODS TO IMPROVE CULTURAL COMMUNICATION SKILLS IN SPECIAL OPERATIONS FORCES

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Research Requirement:

Special Forces soldiers perform missions requiring them to teach, negotiate, guide, and lead people from different cultures. To succeed in such missions, Special Forces soldiers must possess an understanding of these cultures, and the cultural communication skills necessary to work effectively with host nation counterparts, coalition forces, and others whose cultures are different from our own. This research focused on developing methods for identifying and prioritizing cultural communication skills training requirements for specific cultures and Special Forces missions.

Procedure:

The project involved three major activities:

- Identify world cultures of operational relevance to the Special Forces (Task 1 of project).
- Develop a methodology to identify and prioritize cultural communication skills specific to a particular culture and a specific mission, and apply this methodology to three combinations of culture and mission (Tasks 2 and 3 of project).
- Design, develop, and deliver courseware addressing the methods developed during this project and for one culture/mission combination (Tasks 4, 5, and 6 of project).

Initially the project focused on identifying cultures that were operationally-relevant to the Special Forces. Based on a literature review and conferences with academic, diplomatic, and military subject-matter experts, an operational definition of culture was developed from criteria were developed and applied to identify world cultures and grouped them into regions. Applying criteria of size, location, and impact on world events, cultures that are operationally relevant to the Special Forces were identified.

A generic culture template was then developed based upon literature review and conferences. The generic template provides a structured, topical taxonomy of the cultural information domain and notional behaviors that could be found in any culture — e.g., understand/recognize/react appropriately to religious activities, gestures, members of the opposite sex, authority, sense of private space, and greetings. Using the generic template as a starting point and additional literature review, culture-specific templates were developed for three cultures. The cultural behaviors included in the culture-specific templates were then prioritized using focus groups of cultural informants and cluster analyses.

Special Forces mission templates were developed to identify the elements of two Special Forces missions (foreign internal defense, or FID, and unconventional warfare, or UW). Each mission element was then weighted using Special Forces subject matter experts who ranked and made paired comparisons of the elements involved in each mission.

A crosswalk analysis identified the relationship of each behavior in the culture-specific templates to each element in the mission templates. The weights of the culture-specific behaviors and mission elements were combined, resulting in a prioritization of cultural communication skill training requirements.

Two courses were developed. One course, Methods to Improve Cultural Communication Skills in Special Operations Forces, presented an overview of this project's activities through application of the methodology to one culture and one mission. The second course, Cultural Communication Skills Training for Special Forces Conducting a Foreign Internal Defense Mission in the Sultanate of Oman, addressed cultural communication skills critical to the success of a FID mission conducted in Oman. Both courses were delivered at the U.S. Army John F. Kennedy Special Warfare Center and School.

Findings:

Culture was defined as the set of traditional behaviors acquired through transmission from one generation to another within a discrete segment of the human race, sharing a racial or ethnic identity, a geographic location, a specified period of time, or any combination thereof.

Using the definition and additional criteria, 839 distinct cultures were identified and grouped into 10 regions based on cultural linkages, history, and geography.

Applying additional criteria (size, location, and participation in world events) to determine operational relevance, 187 of the 839 cultures were identified as being operationally-relevant to Special Forces requirements.

The generic culture template in its final form describes any culture and contains 919 notional behaviors or skills. This document, essentially a structured outline, was used as the primary investigative tool and interview protocol for the development of culture-specific templates.

Using the generic template, three culture-specific templates with their weighted behavior lists were developed: Arabs of West Asia (448 behaviors), Russian (419 behaviors), and Cuban (455 behaviors). Using cluster analyses, behaviors were assigned unique values on a seven-point scale by cultural informants in facilitated focus group sessions.

Mission templates identified the key elements of the foreign internal defense and unconventional warfare missions. These elements were weighted using paired comparisons and ratings made by Special Forces subject-matter experts.

A crosswalk was accomplished by first linking the mission elements to topics in the generic template, assigning the values of those mission elements to the behaviors associated with the same topics in the culture-specific templates, and then combining the mission element and behavior weights for three culture/mission pairs: Arabs of West Asia/Foreign Internal Defense, Russian/Unconventional Warfare, and Cuban/Foreign Internal Defense. Tables showing the final rank-ordering became the lists of behaviors prioritized for training for those mission/culture combinations.

The Government required that two courses be developed and delivered: a four-hour course describing the project activities through the prioritization of behaviors for the Arabs of West Asia/Foreign Internal Defense pairing; and a six-hour course for Special Forces soldiers going to Oman using the results of the same pairing. The second course considered additional parameters specified by the Government: one Detachment A of soldiers unfamiliar with the culture; mission duration would be six months; soldiers would live in civilian quarters and work during a normal Omani workweek; and their primary task would be to train the Royal Omani Police.

Utilization of Findings:

The information domain for any culture is voluminous and not expressed in behavioral terms. As such, this domain by itself is of little use in identifying and prioritizing cultural communication skills training requirements. The methods developed during this project represent a systematic procedure for performing cultural communication skills training needs assessments. Specifically, the methods facilitate the identification and prioritization of cultural communication skills training requirements, expressed in behavioral terms, that is sensitive to both the culture and the mission involved.

The products of this methodology enable Special Forces commanders and training managers to make informed decisions regarding what cultural communication skills should be taught. This enables precise instructions to be given to course developers and cultural subject—matter experts. As a result, distortions caused by the subjective bias and personal interests are avoided, the training is specifically linked to mission requirements, and maximum productive use is made of limited training time.

The methodology developed offers promise in other applications, such as integrating cultural communication skills training in language programs, structuring area studies and analytical efforts, evaluation of existing cultural skills training programs, and enhancing the success of private sector and Government personnel assigned overseas.

I. INTRODUCTION

Members of the U.S. Army's Special Forces must be able to communicate with a variety of peoples belonging to other cultures, people whose values, motivations, and norms of behavior differ from those of typical Americans. They must be able to communicate effectively. Effective communication requires both understanding the basis for their own behavior and for the behavior of the target culture. To do this, the soldiers must be trained.

The task of dealing with this cross-cultural communications challenge is not easy. Behavioral science literature in the United States concentrates on American values, motivations, and behavioral norms. This literature then, generally addresses only one side of the equation.

Further, the literature concentrating on non-American cultures provides only a beginning. Instead of focusing on the operational dimensions — on practical relevance to very specific needs — this literature generally addresses the concept of culture as follows:

- Culture (with a "big C") e.g., literature, history, and social organization.
- Culture (with a "little c") e.g., holidays, sports, customs, and business practices.
- Cultural practices the culture of the street and daily life.
- Cultural literacy the shared history and iconography of a culture's mentality, a culture's Weltanschauung, or outlook on life.

The foregoing topics are based on the characteristics of the culture itself. As such, they ignore the issue of operational relevance, where the person to be trained may need appropriate and discretely-focused items selected from all four of the major topics.

As a result of the focus on the American culture on the one hand and the efforts to classify cultural aspects on the other hand, training regarding other cultures — especially training relevant to particular operational contexts — has yet to be addressed. While perhaps overstated, the following paradigm illustrates the approach to cultural training needs assessment (or analysis) that tends to be the norm:

- Cultural training requirements are notionally conceived and based on anecdotal evidence with the anecdotal evidence generally being from the personal experience of the individual performing the needs assessment.
- Once the need for cultural training has been identified, the normal method of satisfying it is to hire a cultural expert, provide him or her a set amount of time, and hope that he or she somehow meets an inchoate need. As a result, what one cultural expert will provide to a particular audience will be very different from what another equally qualified cultural expert will provide to the same audience.

Training developed under the foregoing paradigm generally focuses on the superficial manifestations — such as the social structure of a culture — and the training content only casually approaches a perceived need. More important, a systematic way of assessing the need and measuring to see if the need has been satisfied was not found in the literature.

Intensive language instruction is a partial, and often recommended, solution to this requirement. However, this approach has several weaknesses. First, different cultures can share the same language. For example, the cultural context of the French spoken in Cameroon is radically different from the cultural context of the French spoken in Algeria. Secondly, intensive language acquisition is difficult, aptitude-dependent for adults, and costly in terms of both time and resources. Finally, because the cultural component of the training is based on the subjective, anecdotal perceptions of the language teacher, the value of the cultural training remains questionable.

With the assistance of the U.S. Army Research Institute for the Behavioral and Social Sciences (ARI) and the Human Resources Research Organization (HumRRO), the U.S. Army John F. Kennedy Special Warfare Center and School (SWCS) commenced an effort to systematically define Special Forces requirements for cultural knowledge and skills. Results of the initial effort are contained in the analysis of critical incident data in HumRRO's report, Job Analysis of Special Forces Jobs (Russell, Crafts, Tagliareni, McCloy, & Barkley, 1994), and further developed in A Review of Intercultural Communications Requirements for Special Forces Teams (Russell, Crafts, & Brooks, 1995) and Development of a Roadmap for Special Forces Selection and Classification Research (Russell, Crafts, Peterson, Rohrback, Nee, & Mael, 1995).

This work provided a foundation for the work summarized in this report — the development of a systematic method of determining what cultural communication skills needed to be trained to perform specific Special Forces missions within specific cultures.

II. APPROACH

The approach to achieving the objectives of this project consisted of seven tasks:

- Task 1: Identify cultures that are of operational relevance to Special Forces requirements.
- Task 2: Develop a methodology to identify those cultural communication skills, or behaviors, that are required to perform a specific mission within a specific culture and apply this methodology to one specific Special Forces mission to be performed within one specific culture. Herein, the Government selected both the mission and the culture.
- Task 3: Apply the same methodology to two additional missions to be performed within two additional cultures. Again, the Government selected both the missions and the cultures.
- Task 4: Develop two courses of instruction, the first explaining the methodology and the second illustrating how those cultural communication skills identified as critical to a specific mission within a specific culture might be taught.
- Task 5: Teach the two courses developed during Task 4.
- Task 6: Evaluate the courses.
- Task 7: Prepare and submit a technical report describing the project.

III. CULTURES

The objective of Task 1 of the project was to identify cultures that are of operational relevance to the Special Forces.

The following specific requirements were required to achieve the Task 1 objectives:

- Define culture.
- Develop criteria for identifying world cultures.
- Identify world cultures.
- Develop criteria for identifying world cultures that are operationally-relevant to the Special Forces.
- Identify cultures of relevance to Special Forces operational requirements.

Define Culture

The development of an operational definition of culture began with a literature review of:

- The Human Relations Area Files and related publications produced by Human Relations Area Files (HRAF), Inc. The Human Relations Area Files is an extensive collection of materials with data existing in text and in electronic formats. HRAF publications include The Outline of Cultural Materials (Murdock, 1971) and Outline of World Cultures (Murdock, 1972).
- The Background Notes produced by the U.S. Department of State.
- The Culturegram series produced by the David M. Kennedy Center for International Studies, Brigham Young University (Skabelund & Sims, 1996).
- Standard encyclopedia and gazetteers.

It proved impossible to find a single, comprehensive definition of culture suitable for use in an operational context based on this initial literature review. It proved equally impossible to find a useful culture classification scheme from among those in the literature. It became apparent that the development of both were necessary project objectives.

To ensure a sound basis both for a new definition and for a new classification scheme, the literature review was broadened. It transpired that much detailed anthropological and lexicographical work has been done in languages other than English, German and Russian literature proving most fruitful. This review ultimately resulted in a working draft of an annotated bibliography of cultural references that identified 332 sources written in seven languages. Of particular value were comments by Margaret Mead (1961), discussions in Kroeber and Kluckhohn (1963) which assembled some 164 definitions, Fairchild (1968), Freilich (1972), Geertz (1973), Goodenough (1981), Lloyd (1988), Hall (1989), and Durham (1991).

From this review, core elements were extracted, leading to the following operational definition of culture (note that embedded in this definition is the concept that culture is learned):

Culture is the set of traditional behaviors acquired through transmission from one generation to another within a discrete segment of the human race, sharing a racial or ethnic identity, a geographic location, a specified period of time, or any combination thereof.

Identify World Cultures

Having defined culture, it was necessary to develop a set of criteria to differentiate between cultures. These criteria would then be used to identify world cultures. Specifically, the individual cultures, nationalities, ethnic groups, and linguistic groups previously identified would individually be assessed against the definition and the set of criteria to determine their distinctness and uniqueness.

As noted previously, it initially seemed that a review of the literature would quickly provide a classification scheme that was both comprehensive and useful in an operational context. This did not prove to be the case. For example, Murdock (1981) used the following six criteria to classify cultural groups:

- Geographic location.
- Identification in the social science literature as a distinct group.
- Distinct language.
- Shared traditions, religion, folklore, or values.
- Maintenance of group identity in the face of strong assimilative pressures.
- Previous listing in an inventory of the world's cultures.

Two of the criteria above — identification in the social science literature and previous listing in an inventory of the world's cultures — were not very useful. For example, both the Meo and the Miao are identified in the social science literature as distinct cultures, the former identified by anthropologists approaching the culture from Southeast Asia and the latter identified by anthropologists approaching the same culture from China. Yet the Meo and the Miao are the same people. Similarly, the maintenance of group identity can occur within ethnic groups that are subsets of larger cultures.

On the other hand, once sufficient sets of criteria were examined, it became obvious that there was a fairly high level of consistency regarding individual criteria. For example, language, traditions, religion, and folklore were included in virtually all sets of criteria. These criteria were identified and consolidated into a single listing. Each criterion was then reviewed, resulting in deletions, additions, and modifications. The final criteria focused on two principal organizing elements: psychological profile (a unique set of attitudes) and shared history (a unique set of how those attitudes are expressed and the experiences arising therefrom, as well as the experiences imposed from outside the culture). This classification scheme is far broader and more detailed than normally used for classification of cultures. Furthermore, it proved both useful and flexible because, as long as it met most of the criteria, a culture could still rank as unique and distinct even though it failed to meet one or more specific criteria.

Within the broad sets of psychological profile and shared history, the full set of criteria used to identify distinct cultures is as follows:

Psychological Profile

(a unique set of attitudes)

- Values attitudes toward:
  - Ethics
  - Morality
  - Money, wealth, and property
  - Religious customs
  - Time
    - -- Concept
    - -- Clock/calendar time

Importance Relativity

- Historical time

Culture-initiated history (from internal development)
Imposed history (from subjugation to dominant cultures)

- Interpersonal relationships
  - -- How genders relate to each other
  - -- How generations relate to each other
  - -- The role interpersonal space plays
  - -- Psycholinguistic behaviors

Turn-taking behaviors

Negotiation of meaning behaviors Initiation of conversation behaviors

- Person-society relationships
  - -- Attitudes toward legal system
  - -- Attitudes toward authority
  - -- Responsibilities of authority
  - -- Importance of order and structure
  - Duties vs. rights
- Motivations issues most important in forming opinions/taking actions:
  - The relative importance of the group
    - -- Importance of the larger group: clan, tribe, social circle, polity
    - -- Importance of the extended/nuclear family
    - -- Importance and role of the individual
  - Response to the legal system
  - Response to authority
  - Response to the concept of authority
  - Educational philosophy
  - Self-perception of culture as unique
  - Means of conflict resolution
  - Political customs and beliefs

Shared history

(a unique set of how those attitudes are expressed and the experiences arising therefrom, as well as the experiences imposed from outside the culture)

- The arts
  - Mythology
  - Applied arts
  - Architectural tradition
  - Literary tradition
  - Musical tradition

- Historical tradition
- Culinary tradition
- Social structures
  - Class structure
  - Economic structure
    - Agriculture
    - -- Subsistence technology
    - -- Information & service technology
    - -- Industry
    - Property system
- The polity
  - Political structures
    - Durative (arising from within the culture itself)
    - -- Temporary (imposed from outside the culture)
  - Legal system
    - -- Laws
    - Manner in which laws are enforced
    - Process for legal change (development, amendment of laws)
  - Political cohesion
    - Patriotism
- Power structure
- Linguistic characteristics
  - Linguistic history
  - Language(s) used

These criteria represent a departure from what is commonly found in the literature. As can be seen, the linguistic element — upon which most of the anthropological literature focuses — forms only a small (albeit important) aspect of the whole. Similarly, the ethnic, racial and national components play smaller roles in identifying specific cultures.

Applying the definition and the set of criteria described above, 839 distinct and unique cultures were identified (see Appendix A). There is no claim that this is a comprehensive list of all possible cultures that conform to the definition and the established criteria. Instead, the assertions are made that:

- Each of the 839 cultures identified conform to the definition and the criteria.
- Further analysis would have focused on groups comprising no more than 100,000 people, i.e., the identification process would have gone beyond a point of diminishing returns.

Building upon the definition of culture, the criteria with which to identify distinct cultures, and the 839 cultures identified in the preceding phase, attention turned to developing a logical method for grouping cultures into larger sets or regions. The Government specified that the grouping scheme should consider, but not be bound by, the geopolitical division of the world used by the Joint Chiefs of Staff (JCS) to assign responsibilities to the Unified and Specified Commands.

With discrete cultures identified, patterns were sought that would enable identification of logical cultural regions. Again, the literature was of little value. Most sources, to include the HRAF and the Culturegrams, organize cultures by the political boundaries extant at the time the organization was done. This approach was rejected because, in all too many instances, political boundaries and cultural boundaries are not congruent. The Kurds, located in modern Turkey, Iraq, and Iran, provide an excellent example — and an example that, based on the immediate past, is operationally-relevant. Similarly, the JCS division of the world was rejected because this is based on political entities and on geographic relativity. It ignores cultural relationships. For example, Haiti and Francophone Africa fall within the jurisdictions of different major commands. Yet, failing experts in Haiti, specialists in Francophone Africa likely can be taught the idiosyncrasies of Haitian culture more quickly than can specialists in Latin America.

Preliminary leads were provided by Murdock (1981). Another useful notional method of organizing world cultures proved to be that developed by Trade and Culture Magazine (e.g., Field, 1996) which organizes the world into 22 trade zones, based on trading patterns, cultural links, religion, history, politics, and geography.

The 839 cultures were grouped into cultural regions defined by a combination of cultural linkages, history, and geography. While not discounting politics and geography, the greatest emphasis was ultimately placed on the relationships of cultures with each other. In most instances where a choice had to be made between cultural linkages and geographical location, cultural linkages prevailed. Consequently, not all cultural regions are geographically cohesive. More important, and of potential impact to operational requirements, some geographical locations demonstrably have multiple cultures. Identifying these overlays illuminates the complications that may accompany operations in such locations.

Finally, research led to the creation of a category of hybrid cultures — for which the following definition was developed:

A hybrid culture is one in which two or more cultures have intermixed through marriage and/or co-location to the extent that no component is fully identifiable with its mother culture. The hybrid culture forms a new psychological profile and shared history with elements from each mother culture as well as new elements that develop through the intermix.

The 839 cultures previously identified were then placed into ten regions:

- Circum-mediterranean: Cultures located on, or with their roots deriving from, the littoral of the Mediterranean Sea. Significant cultures geographically located in Central and South America but stemming from the Mediterranean region are included. The region contains 55 distinct cultures.
- Continental Eurasian: Non-Mediterranean cultures located on, or with their roots deriving from the European continent south of the Arctic Circle. Also included are those significant cultures elsewhere in the world that derive from the Continental Euro-Asian land mass. The region contains 107 distinct cultures.
- African: Non-Mediterranean cultures located on the African continent, generally south of the Sahara Desert. The region contains 129 distinct cultures.
- Central Asian: Cultures located on, or with their roots deriving from the Central Asian land mass. They generally are those cultures with Turkic, Persian, or Mongol roots. Most also have heavy Islamic influences. The region contains 42 distinct cultures.
- East Asian: Cultures in East Asia that generally have Chinese or non-Turkish Altaic roots. It contains 27 distinct cultures. (Note: China forms an interesting example of overlapping cultural regions; most of its minorities are members of cultures falling within the Central Asian and Indo-Asian Regions while Chinese culture itself heavily overlays the Oceanean Region.)

- Indo-Asian: Cultures located on, or with their roots deriving from Tibet, from South Asia, and from Southeast Asia. They are marked by Buddhist, Hindu, and/or Islamic influences. The region contains 54 distinct cultures.
- American: Amerindian cultures; cultures with Asiatic roots that have evolved independently in a variety of directions, resulting in 256 distinct cultures.
- Circumpolar: This region recognizes the development of cultures from a variety of ethnic and racial stocks apparently evolving along similar lines as a result of encountering a common environment, generally north of the Arctic Circle. A total of 40 distinct cultures was identified within this region.
- Oceanean: Seafaring and trading cultures of the Southeast Asian coast and the Pacific islands a total of 118 distinct cultures.
- Hybrid Cultures: As will be noted by their geographic locations, many of these cultures appear to be the historic result of mass migration (forced or voluntary) for the purpose of plantation agriculture (Africans and Indians in the Caribbean, Indians in the Pacific, etc.). A total of 11 separate hybrid cultures was identified.

Appendix B contains maps showing each of the cultural regions.

Operational Relevance

Building upon previous work, the objective of this activity was to identify those cultures of operational relevance to the Special Forces.

Various government documents were reviewed to examine Special Forces capabilities, missions, functions, and historical use. These included Doctrine for Army Special Operations Forces (FM 100-25) (Department of the Army, 1991), the Joint Special Operations Awareness Program (JSOAP) Reference Manual (Kapos Associates, 1994), Special Operations and International Studies: Political-Military Analysis Handbook (USJFKSWCS, 1990) and Planning in the Special Forces Operational Detachment Alpha (Morrison, Smith, Sticha, & Brooks, 1994). Similarly, standard texts on strategy and geopolitics such as Cline (1975) were reviewed.

Three criteria that could contribute to a culture's operational relevance to the Special Forces were identified. These criteria were:

- Size: Independent of location or participation, a culture that is of sufficient size to make an impact on regional or global affairs. Cultures composed of less than a million people were generally eliminated.
- Location: Independent of size or participation, a culture that is located at or controls a strategically significant site (mineral resources, straits, passes, political boundaries, etc.).
- Participation: Independent of size or location, a culture is in the recent (post-1945) historical record as playing a political and/or military role in the affairs of its region.

Once determined to be unique, a culture assumed operational relevance if it met any of the criteria regarding size, location, or participation. The three final criteria were applied to data concerning all 839 distinct cultures to identify those of operational relevance. Apart from the pass/fail determination of operational relevance, no effort was made to prioritize the cultures with each other — partly because such a ranking will change frequently. Nevertheless, even though the relative priority may be dynamic, the culture's operational relevance should remain constant.

Applying the three relevance criteria, 187 cultures were determined operationally-relevant to Special Forces requirements (see Appendix C):

- Circum-mediterranean: 22 of the 55 cultures.
- Continental Eurasian: 57 of the 107 cultures.
- African: 36 of the 129 cultures.
- Central Asian: 20 of the 42 cultures.
- East Asian: 11 of the 27 cultures.
- Indo-Asian: 22 of the 54 cultures.
- American: 4 of the 256 cultures.
- Circumpolar: None of the 40 cultures within this region were determined to be of operational relevance to Special Forces requirements.
- Oceanean: 13 of the 118 cultures.
- Hybrid Cultures: 9 of the 11 cultures.

IV. IDENTIFY AND PRIORITIZE CULTURAL SKILLS

Task 2 of the project was to develop a methodology to identify and prioritize cultural communication behaviors required to perform specific missions within specific cultures and apply this methodology to a Special Forces mission to be performed within a culture. Foreign internal defense (FID) was selected as the mission and Arabs of West Asia as the culture.

Task 3 of the project was to refine the methodology by applying it to two additional missions to be performed within two additional cultures. The Government selected an unconventional warfare (UW) mission to be performed within the Russian culture and a foreign internal defense mission to be performed within the Cuban culture.

The methodology used was the development and application of the Cultural Communication Skills Template concept. This methodology begins with hierarchically-structured outlines intended to encompass the complete information domains (all possible information) that could pertain to individual cultures and missions. The templates are deliberately structured to distill and organize these information domains to provide logical links to specific cultural communication behaviors and specific mission elements.

Achieving the outcomes of both tasks within this concept involved the development of: a generic cultural communication skills template that could be used to describe any culture and that identified notional behaviors; culture-specific cultural communication skills templates to describe specific cultures and identify culture-specific behaviors; mission templates to identify mission elements; weighting methods to assign values to cultural behaviors and mission elements; and crosswalks to link mission elements to cultural topics and to merge cultural behavior and mission element weightings to create values that could be used to rank-order cultural communication skills training requirements.

Generic Cultural Communication Skills Template

The objective of this step was to develop a master or generic culture template that could be applied to any of the 839 distinct cultures identified during Task 1. The generic template represents a taxonomy for organizing the information domain of any culture. It is essentially a structured outline with headings designed to cover all possible information that could pertain to any culture with the objective of providing sufficient detail in a logical format to enable identification of notional communication behaviors. Development of the generic template required:

- Reviewing the literature, with an emphasis on the organizing principles employed by cultural anthropologists.
- Modifying the organizing principles by adding criteria developed in Task 1.
- Developing drafts for internal review.
- Organizing a working conference attended by experts in the field.
- Reviewing and modifying the drafts based on further literature review and on inputs by cultural experts.
- Making periodic judgments regarding the utility of the template as a method for developing lists of behaviors.

- Applying the generic template to the development of culture-specific templates.
- Revision based on insights gained from using the template.

Cultural communication behaviors were defined as:

Acts that can carry positive emotional value within a culture if done correctly or negative emotional value within a culture if done incorrectly; and skills needed to survive and operate within a culture.

To identify notional communication skills or behaviors, attention was initially focused on the sets of criteria — psychological profile and shared history — developed during Task 1 to identify distinct cultures. These criteria, as shown below, formed the basis for the first sets of template topics:

I. Cultural Core/Psychological Profile/Human Factors

- A. Cultural values
- B. Relationships
- C. Motivations

II. The Culture's Shared History

- A. Historical tradition
- B. Social structures
- C. Manners/protocol
- D. Linguistic characteristics
- E. The arts
- F. Science and technology
- G. Culinary tradition
- H. Recreation and leisure
- I. Sports
- J. Vice
- K. Hygiene
- L. Ethnic or minority groups

Each of the topics noted above was expanded, creating logical subtopics to narrow the focus to a level of detail that enabled specific communication or behaviors to be identified. As noted above, these communication behaviors were identified by examining a specific topic area of the template and responding to two questions:

- Is there a behavior associated with the topic that could carry emotional value if done correctly or incorrectly?
- Is there a behavior associated with the topic that could be needed for survival (operating in the culture) or that would make survival easier?

Although the thrust of this project was to focus on culture, it is impossible to avoid dealing with topics driven by the interaction of culture with nationality and geographic location. Consequently, a third major category was developed to accommodate these national and regional considerations:

III. National/Regional Considerations

- A. Geography
- B. The polity relationship between the cultural and political organizations
- C. Legal system
- D. Military Institutions
- E. Economic structure
- F. Finance
- G. Buying/leasing/selling goods and services
- H. Housing
- I. Health
- J. Communications
- K. Transportation
- L. Educational system

The then-current working draft of the generic culture template was presented to a panel of experts for their review (see Appendix D for the conference report). The experts confirmed the concept and suggested detailed revisions to the template's organization. Of equal value, they added topics for consideration and identified additional generic behaviors. In addition, while confirming the generic template's value as a training needs assessment tool, the experts found its applicability considerably broader than originally envisaged, e.g., use as an interview protocol or as a tool for strategic analysis.

Experts at the conference stressed that gender differences, differences between rural and urban outlooks, and differences between civil and military outlooks can modify the basic behavioral patterns within a given culture. One suggestion to accommodate such differences would be to use modern computer technology to develop a multi-dimensional version of the template. While this suggestion had genuine merit, the resources, time, and cost that would be involved lay far outside the scope of this project. Recognizing, however, that the template should be able to accommodate such distinctions, the following footer was placed in the template:

In each case consider: Both acceptable and unacceptable behavior; gender differences; differences between urban and rural segments of the culture; differences between civil and military segments of the culture; sources of tension within the culture regarding the issue; latitude/tolerance provided by members of the culture to non-members

Following the conference, the working draft of the generic culture template was refined by incorporating the experts' recommendations and adding information gleaned from continued literature review. The working draft was submitted to the Government at the end of Task 2 and was used to develop culture-specific templates of the Russian and Cuban cultures in Task 3. Of particular value in Task 3 were the comments of the additional outside cultural experts as they applied the generic template to their culture or area of expertise. Their insights led to further refinement of the generic culture template. The refinements improved the generic template's descriptive utility and more clearly linked the notional behaviors to the template topics.

The Cultural Communication Skills Template: Generic was submitted to the Government during Task 5.1 This template covers the possible information domain of any culture and identifies 919 notional behaviors. In general, the notional behaviors are linked to the fourth level of the template (except where a fourth level does not exist). A description of the template and elements of the templating process is contained in the template's preface (see Appendix E).

Arabs of West Asia Cultural Communication Skills

Template Development

Using the generic template as a starting point, a culture-specific template that describes the Arabs of West Asia culture and pertinent behaviors was developed through:

- Further literature review, focusing on the Arabs of West Asia culture, with emphasis on the organizing principles contained in the generic template.
- Developing draft iterations of the culture-specific template for internal review and for review by outside experts from various disciplines.
- Organizing and conducting a conference attended by cultural experts.
- Reviewing and modifying the drafts based on inputs by cultural experts and cultural informants.
- Final review by an expert on Arab culture and final modification based on the comments provided by the expert.

Relevant literature pertaining to the Arabs of West Asia culture was reviewed (see Appendix F). The review resurfaced an issue originally raised during the identification of unique cultures — do the Arabs of West Asia represent one culture or is the culture of the Levantine Arabs substantively different from that of the Gulf Arabs? It was confirmed that the Gulf Arabs represent a conservative/traditional manifestation and the Levantine Arabs represent a cosmopolitan/modern manifestation of the same culture.

A draft Arabs of West Asia culture template that included a preliminary list of behaviors was developed and presented to a panel of experts at the conference for their review and input. During the conference (again see Appendix D for the conference report), the experts confirmed the culture's scope, provided editorial and substantive comments regarding the accuracy of the template in describing the culture, identified behaviors to add to the template, and modified proposed criteria for assessing the importance of those behaviors. The discussions also led to consideration of the various regional subsets of the culture and developed overall themes regarding the culture.

Following the conference, the Arabs of West Asia culture template was refined by incorporating the recommendations submitted by the experts and adding information gleaned from continued literature review. A qualified Arabist then reviewed the draft and made final recommendations. A Cultural Communication Skills Template: Arabs of West Asia was produced and presented to the Government at the end of Task 2.2

Of note are some structural differences between the generic template and the Arabs of West Asia template. In general, if a behavior from the generic template was not verified by review of the literature or by a culture informant, it does not appear in the Arabs of West Asia template. Furthermore, in this instance, a country was not specified by the Government. Because specific behaviors could not be associated with some topics, significant portions of Part III (National/Regional Considerations) in the generic culture template do not appear in the Arabs of

West Asia culture template. To maintain consistency and to facilitate comparison with other templates to be developed, the numbering system of the generic culture template was retained.

The Cultural Communication Skills Template: Arabs of West Asia identifies 448 discrete behaviors. It must be emphasized that no consideration was ever given to possible missions during the development of this template. As a result, the product pertains only to one culture but it is of equal validity to all possible missions.

Prioritizing Arabs of West Asia Cultural Behaviors

The objective of this activity was to prioritize the behaviors identified in the Cultural Communication Skills Template: Arabs of West Asia in accordance with their relative importance within that culture. All behaviors contained in the template were prioritized using cluster analysis and cultural informants, who participated in three sequential focus groups.

Twelve cultural informants participated in the first (Phase I) focus group, ten of the original twelve participated in the second (Phase II) focus group, and five of those participating in the second focus group participated in the third (Phase III) focus group.

With two exceptions, the cultural informants were mature native Arabs born and raised in the culture who simultaneously were experienced teachers — teaching Arabic to speakers of American English or teaching English to speakers of Arabic. In all cases, their residency in a metropolitan area gave them experience in dealing with American culture. Furthermore, the process of language teaching necessarily involves teaching culture because many words, or even concepts, do not translate verbatim. As a result, all of the cultural informants were accustomed to examining their own culture to a greater degree than is typical.

Phase I

Each cultural informant was provided with an explanation of the purposes and objectives of the focus group and a demographic data form to provide background information concerning their expertise. Each was also provided the draft Cultural Communication Skills Template: Arabs of West Asia, an explanation of the rating scale, and a rating form.

Cultural informants were asked to review the topical context for each of the 448 behaviors contained in the draft Cultural Communication Skills Template: Arabs of West Asia to determine an appropriate rating for each based on a seven-point Likert scale, and to record their individual assessments on their rating forms (see Appendix G for copies of instructions given to focus group participants). The focus group facilitator emphasized that this was to be an individual exercise; that collaboration was not acceptable. The cultural informants immediately noted that the degree of cultural reaction to specific behaviors could vary widely by subregion and by country. The facilitator agreed and instructed them to consider the worst case in each instance.

Cluster analysis and descriptive statistics were performed using these ratings. At the end of the first phase, a large number of the behaviors had the same mean rankings. These were placed into 20 clusters, which served as the basis for the Phase II focus groups.

Phase II

In the Phase II focus groups, ten of the original twelve cultural informants assessed the 448 behaviors in terms of the 20 clusters resulting from the analysis performed during Phase I. They used the same scenario (see Appendix G) and were instructed to work independently.

The seven-point scale used in this phase was designed to force the cultural informants to compare individual behaviors to the other behaviors contained in the same cluster. The scale had anchors only at the extreme points, in which "1" represented less impact than other behaviors in the cluster, and "7" represented more impact than other behaviors in the cluster. Furthermore, the cultural informants were required to make forced choices. Thus, if a cluster contained 28 behaviors, participants were instructed to assign each of the seven scale points to four distinct behaviors. Similarly, if a cluster contained nine behaviors, participants were required to assign each of the seven scale points to at least one behavior. In this example, any of the seven scale points could be assigned to the two remaining behaviors.

Following the second focus group, cluster analyses were performed and 76 clusters of behaviors were identified and addressed in Phase III.

Phase III

Five of the cultural informants participating in the Phase II focus group participated in the Phase III focus group. The protocol remained the same as that used in the preceding workshops. This time, ranking the behaviors that remained in each cluster was to be effected by discussion and consensus.

Moving through each of the 76 clusters of behaviors, the consensus discussion focused on rank-ordering the tied behaviors within each cluster. When consensus was reached, the behaviors within the cluster were rank-ordered. When consensus could not be reached, the majority opinion determined the final ratings.

Analysis of the Phase III data generated discrete weights for each of the 448 specific behaviors contained in the Cultural Communication Skills Template: Arabs of West Asia from which a prioritized list was produced (see Appendix H).

Russian Cultural Communication Skills

Template Development

The objective and methodology employed to develop the Russian culture template were the same as those used to develop the Arabs of West Asia culture template.

Using the generic culture template as a starting point, a draft Russian culture template was developed based on a review of the literature (see Appendix I). This draft was presented at a workshop to a group of Russian and American scholars of Russian culture with recent first-hand experience observing changes in Russian culture. Following their input regarding content and behaviors the draft was further refined and then presented to an expert on Russian culture for final review. The Russian culture template was revised based on comments received and a final version of the Cultural Communication Skills Template: Russian was presented to the Government at the completion of Task 3.3

As with the Arabs of West Asia culture template, there are structural differences between the generic culture template and the Russian culture template. In general, if a topic or behavior from the generic template was not verified by literature review or by a culture informant, it does not appear in the Russian template. However, to maintain consistency and to facilitate comparison with the other templates, the numbering system of the generic culture template was retained.

The Cultural Communication Skills Template: Russian identifies 419 discrete behaviors. Again, no consideration was ever given to possible missions during the development of this template. As a result, although the product pertains to one culture, it is equally valid to all possible missions.

Prioritizing Russian Cultural Behaviors

The objective of this activity was to prioritize the behaviors identified in the Cultural Communication Skills Template: Russian in accordance with their relative importance within that culture.

The behavior weighting process for the Russian culture was identical to that described for the Arabs of West Asia culture. A group of cultural informants — well-educated, relatively-recent emigres from Russia — was assembled. Following a protocol identical to that used in weighting Arabs of West Asia behaviors (see Appendix G), three sequential focus groups were conducted. Fifteen cultural informants participated in the first group, ten of those fifteen in the second group, and five of the ten from in the second group participated in the third group.

As a result of the focus groups, discrete weights were generated for each of the 419 specific behaviors contained in the Cultural Communication Skills Template: Russian and a prioritized list was produced (see Appendix J).

There are two major differences between the Russian and the Arabs of West Asia templates. First, as was also the case with Cuba, the culture was closely identified with a specific nation-state. Consequently, it was necessary to expand considerably the information and behaviors included in Part III. The separation of nationality or country-driven information and behaviors was considered a strength of the templating process.

Second, as noted in the text of the template, it must be noted that not only is the Russian nation in transformation, Russian culture may also be changing. All of the experts consulted urged caution and close attention to the change process and many were skeptical of the proposition that the Russians would return to some vaguely defined pre-communist cultural roots. Most observers of Russian culture expected it to continue to evolve rapidly in new directions and none was confident of predicting the future course of change.

Cuban Cultural Communication Skills

Template Development

The objective and methodology employed to develop the Cuban culture template were the same as those used to develop the Arabs of West Asia and Russian culture templates.

Again using the generic culture template as a starting point, a draft Cuban culture template was developed based on additional literature reviews (see Appendix K). This draft was presented to a group of Cuban and American scholars with recent first-hand experience observing the changes in Cuba. The draft Cuban template was revised based on their input, reviewed by a final expert, and revised again. The final Cultural Communication Skills Template: Cuban was delivered to the Government at the end of Task 3.4

As with the Arabs of West Asia and Russian culture templates, there are structural differences between the generic culture template and the Cuban culture template. In general, if a topic or behavior from the generic template was not verified by review of the literature or by a cultural informant, it does not appear in the Cuban template. However, to maintain consistency and to facilitate comparison with the other templates, the numbering system of the generic culture template was retained.

The Cultural Communication Skills Template: Cuban identifies 455 discrete behaviors. Again, no consideration was ever given to possible missions during the development of this template. As a result, the product pertains only to one culture but it is of equal validity to all possible missions.

Prioritizing Cuban Cultural Behaviors

The objective of this phase was to prioritize the behaviors identified in the Cultural Communication Skills Template: Cuban in accordance with their relative importance within that culture.

All cultural behaviors contained in the draft Cultural Communication Skills Template: Cuban were prioritized by well-educated cultural informants participating in three facilitator-guided, sequential focus groups. The challenges of dealing with a culture under stress and relative paucity of direct access to the culture led to the addition of an additional criterion for the selection of cultural informants. This was the requirement that none of the informants could have left the culture more than two years prior to participation in the focus groups. As a consequence, translations of the templates, protocols and forms, and an interpreter, were available during the focus groups.

The behavior weighting process for the Cuban culture was identical to that described for the Russian culture. Again, three sequential focus groups were conducted. Fifteen cultural informants participated in the first focus group, ten of those fifteen in the second, and five of the ten participating in the second participated in the third focus group.

Phase I of the Cuban focus groups produced results that were an interesting variation from those obtained in Phase I of the Arabs of West Asia or Russian behavior focus groups. Virtually all of the initial Cuban ratings were clustered at the low end of the scale, whereas the Phase I results of the Arabs of West Asia and Russian ratings were more evenly distributed. This possibility was not anticipated so, fascinating as the results were, no supported conclusions could be drawn from this very skewed distribution.

It will be recalled that in Phase I, each informant was asked to rate each behavior on a scale from 1 to 7 (see Appendix G). At the end of the first phase of the behavior weighting for each culture, the mean score for each behavior was computed to prepare for Phase II. During the first phase of the Cuban rating, however, virtually all behaviors received a mean score of 3 or less. After considerable review, and upon careful consideration of the long-range purposes of the project, it was decided to exclude from further consideration any behaviors with a mean rating below 2 (little or no negative impact). The basis for this decision was simply that, in subsequent phases, the informants would be asked to discriminate between hundreds of behaviors that they had already determined have little or no impact on effective interaction with members of the culture.

After eliminating the low-rated behaviors, the focus group process proceeded through the second and third phases as before, assigning weights only to the 74 remaining behaviors.

This resulted in a prioritized listing of 74 behaviors from the 455 contained in the draft Cultural Communication Skills Template: Cuban (see Appendix L).

Several observations may be made regarding the Cuban culture template. As with the Russian culture, the Cuban culture is inextricably linked to a specific nation. To some extent this was anticipated in Task 1 of this project where several cultures (Cuban among them) were identified as hybrid, i.e., showing elements derived from several cultures merged to become a unique and distinct culture. However, a particular challenge relating to Cuba was describing the culture as it is, as opposed to the culture as it is remembered by the Cuban expatriate community (the primary source of scholars on Cuba). Furthermore, partly stemming from idiosyncrasies at the core of Cuban culture itself, any discussion of Cuba today quickly becomes intensely politicized.

Another challenge appears to be an aspect of communist social organizations worldwide. It appears that they tend to soften the intensity of underlying cultural features. Clearly Cuba as it exists today is quite dissimilar from the Cuba being remembered, and it is very likely to be quite different from the Cuba that will emerge after Fidel Castro Ruz passes from the scene.

Lastly, a simple-sounding set of phrases that surfaced during the Cuban conference have great resonance when considering Cuban culture:

- Cuba is an island: Cuba is insular, isolated, and somewhat unique.
- Cuba is a big island. There is variation on the island simply because of its size.
- Cuba is only 90 miles from the United States. Cuba has always interacted with the United States; there has been a constant interchange of people and ideas for all of our 300+ years of shared history.

Mission Templates

A mission template is a structured outline of the elements that constitute the mission. Mission templates are developed based on analysis of the doctrinal and training documents, and on the review and comments of subject-matter experts (SMEs).

Foreign Internal Defense

The objective of this activity was to identify the elements of the foreign internal defense mission. This involved the following steps:

- Reviewing the literature, with emphasis on the Government-furnished materials.
- Developing drafts for review by mission experts.
- Conducting a conference attended by experts in the field.
- Reviewing and modifying the drafts based on inputs by mission experts.

A review of literature provided by the Government related to the foreign internal defense mission was conducted. The literature reviewed included: Training the Force (FM 25-100) (Department of the Army, 1988b), Doctrine for Army Special Operations Forces (FM 100-25) (Department of the Army, 1991), Job Analysis of Special Forces Jobs (Russell et al., 1994), Joint Special Operations Awareness Program (JSOAP) Reference Manual (Kapos Associates, 1994), and Standing Operating Procedures for Special Forces Operational Detachments in Unconventional Warfare (ST 31-187) (USAJFKSWC, 1975). The key document proved to be Mission Training Plan for the Special Forces Company: Foreign Internal Defense (ARTEP 31-807-33-MTP) (Department of the Army, 1990).

From these documents, elements of the foreign internal defense mission were identified as advise host-nation counterparts, train host-nation forces, and evaluate military effectiveness of host-nation forces.

Recognizing that essential supporting activities must be performed within the culture to accomplish the mission activities, mission support elements of command and control, security, and combat service support (or logistics) were added.

The foregoing elements covered mission execution and the support of mission execution. However, in a typical foreign internal defense mission, soldiers do not spend all of their time performing the mission. As a result, cross-cultural misunderstandings can and do occur during non-duty time through activities not directly related to mission tasks. Furthermore, some activities, such as personal finance, recreation, and the ability to maintain links to family and friends at home, are essential for morale support. Accordingly, a personnel support element was added to the foreign internal defense mission template.

At the conference mention previously (see Appendix D), a separate working group composed of active and retired soldiers examined the draft foreign internal defense mission template and a notional composite template. These experts achieved consensus regarding the broad outline of the foreign internal defense mission template — to include the importance of the personnel support element. Even though off-duty time is not covered in any mission documentation, the experts confirmed the possibility and importance of cross-cultural communications challenges during non-duty time. The experts made other, minor recommendations that were incorporated into the template.

The outcome, the draft Foreign Internal Defense Mission Template (see Appendix M) contains seven mission elements, each with appropriate subelements.

Having identified them, it was necessary to weight each of the seven elements of the foreign internal defense mission.

Twenty-three members of the SWCS staff and faculty, including 3 majors, 3 captains, 4 chief warrant officers, 4 master sergeants, and 9 sergeants first class were recruited to accomplish mission element weighting. Each of these individuals was conversant with and experienced in performing foreign internal defense missions. They accomplished the weighting in a single, facilitated focus group.

Mission raters were provided with a brief explanation of the project and an explanation of the mission elements to be rated. Each then independently completed a two-part worksheet assessing the mission elements two different ways. Part 1 of the worksheet required the raters to make paired comparisons of each mission element while Part 2 asked the raters to rate the importance of the mission element on a seven-point scale in which "7" was most important and "1" was least important to mission success (see Appendix O). Two of the worksheets were incorrectly completed and therefore discarded. Consequently, the analysis and final weightings were based on 21 assessments. The results are shown in the following tables:

Table 1 - Paired Comparisons (FID)

	Total	Mean	Median	SD	Max	Min
Adv/Assist	74	3.52	4	1.72	6	1
Train	99	4.71	5	1.14	6	2
Eval	57	2.71	3	1.61	5	0
C&C	52	2.47	3	1.23	5	0
Security	92	4.38	5	1.62	6	2
CSS	43	2.04	2	1.49	5	0
Pers Spt	24	1.14	1	1.10	3	0

Table 2 - Element ratings (FID)

	Total	Mean	Median	SD	Max	Min
Adv/Assist	123	5.85	. 6	1.23	7	3
Train	129	6.14	7	1.42	7	1
Eval	110	5.23	5	1.57	7	2
C&C	89	4.23	4	1.57	7	1
Security	125	5.95	7	1.35	7	3
CSS	96	4.57	4	1.53	7	2
Pers Spt	79	3.76	4	1.67	7	1

The correlation between the means of the paired comparisons and the element ratings was .94. The means of the paired comparisons scores were chosen as the mission weighting values because they were as reliable as the element rating scores and more finely discriminated the mission elements.

The final weightings prioritized the elements of the foreign internal defense mission as follows:

Train:	4.71
Security:	4.38
Advise and assist:	3.52
Evaluate:	2.71
Command and control	2.47
Combat service support	2.04
Personnel support:	1.14

The foreign internal defense mission elements weightings were crosswalked with the Arabs of West Asia culture in Task 2 and with the Cuban culture in Task 3.

Unconventional Warfare

With one exception, the methodology used to develop the foreign internal defense mission template was followed in the development of the unconventional warfare mission template — in lieu of a conference, a draft of the template was provided to the SWCS project officer for review.

Government-provided materials were reviewed and analyzed to identify the elements of an unconventional warfare mission. The sources included those cited previously with the addition of Mission Training Plan for the Special Forces Company: Unconventional Warfare (ARTEP 31-807-30-MTP) (Department of the Army, 1988a).

Analysis of the unconventional warfare mission proved more difficult than analysis of the foreign internal defense mission. Whereas the latter mission is relatively straightforward, the unconventional warfare mission is more complex. Similarly, although doctrinal publications concerning the foreign internal defense mission clearly defined the parameters of that mission, comparable clarity was lacking in documents describing the unconventional warfare mission. Indeed, no single document accurately describes all aspects of unconventional warfare mission requirements; the emphasis is almost entirely on guerrilla warfare, virtually ignoring those aspects of the mission pertaining to operations and support of the underground and auxiliary elements of an insurgent movement.

The major mission execution elements of the unconventional warfare mission were advise and assist and train. The advise and assist includes: organization (guerrilla, underground, and auxiliary), political-military integration (strategy, force development, deployment), operations, and operational support (recruitment, command and control, intelligence and security, logistics).

As was the case with the foreign internal defense mission, key aspects of mission support for the Special Forces themselves must be performed within the culture and can therefore drive requirements for cultural communication skills. Accordingly, mission support elements — command, control, and communications, intelligence and security, logistics, and psychological operations support — were added.

Because the members of Special Forces elements performing an unconventional warfare mission work with an insurgency rather than with an established government, the issue of interacting with members of the culture during off-duty time does not arise. Accordingly, it was determined that the personnel support aspects important to the foreign internal defense mission need not be considered in performing the unconventional warfare mission.

As noted above, the draft unconventional warfare template was provided to and approved by the SWCS project officer (see Appendix N for final template).

Having identified the six elements of the unconventional warfare mission, it was necessary to weight them.

Sixteen mission SMEs were recruited from the SWCS staff and faculty to rate the elements of the unconventional warfare mission. All were experienced Special Forces soldiers; they included 2 majors, 1 captain, 2 chief warrant officers, 1 sergeant major, 2 master sergeants, 7 sergeants first class, and 1 staff sergeant. All raters were thoroughly conversant with all aspects of the unconventional warfare mission as well as with the doctrinal and training publications associated with that mission. The six unconventional warfare mission elements were rated during a single, facilitated focus group.

During the unconventional warfare mission rating session, the raters were provided with a brief explanation of the project and the mission elements to be rated. Each then independently completed a two-part worksheet assessing the mission elements two different ways. Part 1 of the worksheet required the raters to make paired comparisons of each mission element while Part 2 asked the raters to rate the importance of each mission element on a seven-point scale (in which 7 was most important and 1 was least important to mission success). Copies of the instructions and rating worksheets are attached as Appendix O. The analysis performed on the raters' assessments is shown in the following tables:

Table 3 - Paired Comparisons (UW)

	Total	Mean	Median	SD	Max	Min
Adv/Asst	66	4.12	4	0.88	5	2
Train	51	3.18	4	1.05	5	2

PSYOP	13	0.81	1	1.50	4	0

Table 4 - UW Element Ratings (UW)

	Total	Mean	Median	SD	Max	Min

Log	83	5.18	5	1.37	7	3
PSYOP	62	3.87	4	1.70	7	1

Again, the correlation between means of the paired comparisons and those of the element ratings was .94. As a result, the mean of the paired comparisons were chosen as the mission weighting values because they more finely discriminated the mission elements.

The final weightings prioritized the elements of the unconventional warfare mission:

Advise and assist:	4.12
Intelligence and Security:	3.62
Train:	3.18
Logistics:	1.50
Command, control, communications:	1.43
PSYOP:	0.81

The unconventional warfare mission element ratings were crosswalked with the Russian culture in Task 3.

Culture/Mission Crosswalk

Linking mission elements to the behaviors identified in the cultural templates was the next step in developing prioritized lists of cultural skills training requirements. During Task 2 a composite template was created to link behaviors pertaining to the Arabs of West Asia culture with the elements of the foreign internal defense mission (see Appendix P). The mechanics of constructing the composite template proved complex, cumbersome, time-consuming, and potentially confusing. During Task 3, topic/mission element crosswalk worksheets were developed to link cultural behaviors to mission elements. These topic/mission element crosswalk worksheets replaced the composite template and accomplished the same objective. At the same time, they provided a streamlined process more amenable to review and potential revisions.

Two distinct topic/mission element crosswalk worksheets were developed, one for the foreign internal defense mission and one for the unconventional warfare mission. Herein, the first four levels of the generic culture template's topic hierarchy were reproduced as the first column of each worksheet. The elements of the foreign internal defense mission headed the remaining columns of the first worksheet while the elements of the unconventional warfare mission headed the subsequent columns of the second worksheet.

The worksheets were used to determine the relevance of each generic culture topic to each mission element. This was a simple yes/no determination — either the topic was relevant to a mission element or it was not. If the topic was relevant, an "X" was placed in the cell where the cultural topic and the mission element intersected; if it was not, the cell was left blank.

Two topic/mission element crosswalk worksheets were produced, one identifying the relevance of generic cultural topics to elements of the foreign internal defense mission (see Appendix Q) and the other identifying the relevance of these topics to the unconventional warfare mission (see Appendix R). It should be noted that, since these worksheets link the mission elements to generic cultural topics, they can be used with any subsequently-developed culture-specific template.

When the topic/mission element crosswalk worksheets were completed, the results were matched to the behaviors associated with the topics in the appropriate culture-specific templates and the final tables were constructed. Mission element scores were adjust to a metric in the range of 0-7 (the same range used in the behavior weightings). These scores were linked to the mission element "X's" in the table. Culture weights for the behaviors from Appendices H, J, and L were inserted into the tables. Finally, mission element weights were summed and combined with behavior weights.

For each of the three combinations of cultures and missions, the procedures described above generated a list of specific cultural behaviors, prioritized in terms of the mission to be performed within that culture (see Appendices S, T, and U).

In each case, the prioritization of cultural behaviors is sensitive to both the culture and a specific mission. Because specific cultural communication skills are identified and are then prioritized within the contexts of both culture and mission, Special Forces commanders and training managers can make informed decisions regarding what should be taught. This empowers commanders and training managers to be specific regarding the instructions they provide to courseware developers. As a result, distortions caused by the subjective bias and personal interests of the courseware developer (often a cultural subject-matter expert) are avoided and the training is directly focused on mission requirements.

Certain aspects of this methodology should be highlighted in the interest of further development of this approach. To reiterate, each mission template and its mission elements were linked to the cultural topics (fourth level or higher) of the generic template in the topic/mission element crosswalk worksheet prepared for that mission. This linkage was made without regard to a specific culture and should be constant across all cultures. Since the behaviors of the culture-specific templates are also linked to fourth or higher level topics, and since these topics are the same as those in the generic template, a direct association can be made between the linkage of mission elements to culture-specific behaviors. Once behavior weighting has been done for a culture, that culture's behaviors can be linked to any mission for which a topic/mission element crosswalk worksheet has been completed.

Mission weighting and culture weighting were given equivalent value in establishing the final prioritization. This was quite simply a judgment call since the relative importance of mission and culture had never before been investigated in a comprehensive manner. The appropriateness of this judgment is worthy of further investigation.

Training Development

Development of a preliminary prioritized list of cultural communication skills training requirements represented the last step of the templating process. The prioritized lists of behaviors resulting from the templating methodology are considered preliminary because they do not account for other factors that must be considered before final training requirements are established. Once a Special Forces unit commander or training manager is given a preliminary prioritized list of cultural communication skills training requirements, he should review it to assess two factors:

- The existing knowledge, skills, and abilities (KSAs) of the soldiers who will execute the mission. Factors to be considered would include prior experience with or exposure to the culture, prior cultural communication skills training, and ethnic or religious backgrounds and knowledge.
- Operational requirements and details not contained in generic mission descriptions.
   For example, while a foreign internal defense mission could include driving vehicles within the culture, specific mission constraints might forbid driving.

Based on his assessment of the foregoing factors, the Special Forces commander or training developer should delete cultural behaviors based on his soldiers' KSAs and those behaviors that do not apply to specific mission requirements. Although some behaviors would be deleted from consideration for training, the relative prioritization of those remaining does not change.

The Special Forces commander or training manager next must consider the available training time and the time it takes to train the behaviors. Beginning with the most important behavior, he should estimate the time required to train each behavior, continuing down the prioritized list until the available time for cultural communication skills training is exhausted. The behaviors that will be taught must then be clustered into logical groups, which in turn must be sequenced for instruction.

Although not all cultural communication skills will be taught, the complete process assures Special Forces commanders or training managers that the resulting training is focused on those behaviors that are most critical to the success of his mission. They thereby make most productive use of limited training time.

V. DEVELOP AND DELIVER COURSEWARE

The objective of Task 4 of the project was to develop two courses of instruction. The first was to explain the methodology used to identify and prioritize cultural communication skills (or behaviors) within the context of a specific culture and mission. The second course was to illustrate how a course teaching cultural behaviors identified as critical to a specific mission within a specific culture might be designed and taught. Task 5 was to teach the two courses developed.

Template Process Course

The Government required a four-hour course of instruction to be developed that described the work performed during Tasks 1 and 2 of the project, specifically:

- The process of identifying world cultures of operational relevance to Special Forces requirements.
- The methodology of identifying and prioritizing cultural communication skills pertaining to a specific culture in terms of a Special Forces mission to be performed within that culture.

The template process course was to be designed for a student population of training managers and course developers from the SWCS staff and faculty and was to include all pertinent materials.

Course strategy was prescribed by the Government: four instructional hours, lock-step, group-paced, instructor-dependent, paper-based materials. Given these constraints, courseware was developed in accordance with the U.S. Army's instructional systems development (ISD) process to address the following topics:

- Identifying world cultures relevant to Special Forces requirements.
- Developing the generic cultural communication skills template.
- Developing the Arabs of West Asia culture-specific template and weighting of the cultural behaviors identified.
- Developing the foreign internal defense mission template and the weighting of the mission elements identified.
- Prioritizing of cultural behaviors within the mission context.

The resulting courseware, entitled Determining Cultural Communication Skills Training Requirements for Special Forces Personnel Conducting a Foreign Internal Defense Mission in Oman, included a program of instruction (POI), instructor handbook (with a suggested script), overhead transparencies, and student handouts.<sup>5</sup>

Cultural Communication Skills Course

The Government required a six-hour course of instruction be designed and developed to illustrate how the cultural communication skills identified and prioritized through the templating process might be taught.

The mission scenario upon which this course was to be based involved an A Detachment deploying to the Sultanate of Oman to train the Royal Omani Police. This mission was to be six months in duration, performed during the course of the normal Omani work week by soldiers unfamiliar with the region, the culture, and the nation. The soldiers would be housed in a Muscat hotel during the course of the mission.

The Government also specified that this course was to include all pertinent materials. The course was to be designed for delivery to a student population with no knowledge of or experience in dealing with members of the Arabs of West Asia culture.

The strategy, instructional media, and instructional times for this course were also prescribed by the Government: six instructional hours, lock-step, group-paced, instructor-dependent, paper-based materials. Within these constraints, courseware was developed in accordance with the U.S. Army's ISD process.

The course was based on the first 41 of the 448 behaviors identified in the Arabs of West Asia culture and prioritized within the contexts of that culture and the foreign internal defense mission (see Appendix S for the complete list).

Because the target student population was assumed to lack experience with the culture, the process of assessing current KSAs was not necessary. However, it was still necessary to select those behaviors that could be taught within the constraint of six hours. The time needed to teach each behavior was estimated. When the total required teaching time equaled six hours, the process stopped. As a result, the behaviors ranking from 1 through 41 on the preliminary prioritized list of cultural behaviors were those addressed in the training.

The 41 behaviors selected for training were grouped into seven logical clusters. It is important to note that, from this point on, the individual ranking of the behaviors was unimportant—as long as all were covered by the training. The clusters were then sequenced resulting in the following course units:

- The Religion of Islam
- Relationships with Women
- Offensive/Hostile Behavior In Oman
- Police Authority and Rights
- Driving in Oman
- The Omani Military
- Water in Oman

Each of the behavior clusters became a discrete unit in the course. However, because the notional students would lack any knowledge of Oman, an eighth unit was added at the beginning to provide an overview of the country. Two final units were added, one at the beginning to provide a course overview and one at the end to provide a course summary and test. The courseware included an open-book examination to be collectively self-scored by the class, which enabled the course testing and course summary to be combined.

The resulting courseware, entitled Cultural Communication Skills Training for Special Forces (SF) Personnel Conducting a Foreign Internal Defense (FID) Mission in the Sultanate of Oman, included a POI, instructor handbook (with a suggested script), overhead transparencies, student handouts, end-of-course test, and scoring key.<sup>6</sup>

Course Delivery

The objective of this phase (Tasks 5 and 6 of the project) was to deliver each of the courses developed during Task 4 to students selected and provided by the Government.

The instructional methodology for both courses was that prescribed in their programs of instruction. Both were lock-step, group-paced, instructor-dependent courses supported by paper-based materials.

The course entitled Determining Cultural Communication Skills Training Requirements for Special Forces Personnel Conducting a Foreign Internal Defense Mission in Oman was delivered to ten members of the SWCS staff and faculty.

The course entitled Cultural Communication Skills Training for Special Forces (SF)

Personnel Conducting a Foreign Internal Defense (FID) Mission in the Sultanate of Oman was delivered to eleven students — a mixture of soldiers with no experience of any Arab culture, soldiers with considerable experience in dealing with members of the Arabs of West Asia culture, and training developers from the SWCS staff and faculty.

Given contractual requirements, the nature of the courseware, and student attendance factors, no formal course evaluation activities were executed. However, the following points were observed:

- Course delivery times: There were insignificant differences between actual and estimated subunit, unit, and course delivery times. Consequently, modifications to the delivery times cited in the programs of instruction were not necessary.
- Course materials: Four minor typographical errors were identified in the instructor guides and 184 overhead slides that supported the two courses. These were corrected in the electronic versions of the course materials delivered to the Government.
- Participants' responses: Informal discussions between the course developers, instructors, and participants were conducted at the conclusion of each course. In both cases, the materials were well received by the participants. They advised that they fully comprehended the information provided and found the courses both informative and beneficial.

VI. FUTURE DIRECTIONS

The work accomplished during this project is noteworthy for two reasons. First, a system of classifying and sorting world cultures within a specific operational context was developed. Second, a method of systematically identifying and prioritizing cultural communication skills within the context of a specific culture and a specific mission was developed and tested.

With respect to world cultures:

- This project focused on identifying cultures without respect to the political entities in which the cultures might reside. This emphasis was important because it showed overlays within geographical regions that might otherwise have been missed. Yet the Special Forces must operate within a political context; planning and operations must therefore be tied to the current political order. For this reason, resorting the lists of world cultures in terms of the nations into which they fall might be of value to the Special Forces and potentially other agencies. For example, the work performed concerning the Sultanate of Oman was based on the Arabs of West Asia culture. However, although this is the dominant culture, the Sultanate is actually an admixture of overlaid cultures, some of which stem from South Asian and African roots.
- e Ignoring political boundaries as well as time and funding constraints restricted project data acquisition to that able to support the use of three criteria to determine operational relevance. It would be worthwhile to confirm or modify these findings by subjecting world cultures to broader set of criteria for determination of operational relevance. One such set of criteria might be the set that was initially considered. These criteria were population, land area and location, fit between cultural and political boundaries, sociopolitical structure, philosophical orientation, influence of culture on political decision-making, economic trends, use of force/violence to settle disputes, military factors (nuclear, conventional, and unconventional), access to U.S. decision-making processes, and penetration requirements. Such an effort would require the accumulation and sorting of extensive additional data that, ideally, would be stored in an electronic format for ready retrieval and update.
- Acquiring and sorting the data necessary to support a more comprehensive assessment of operational relevance would have value far beyond the mere classification of cultures. Using the generic culture template as a master document, it might enable rapid development of culture-specific templates whenever required. Furthermore, such a database might support a host of other purposes intelligence analysis, mission assessment and planning, and course development for area studies and foreign language training, to name but a few.

With respect to the methodology for identifying and prioritizing cultural communication skills:

- The templating methodology was tested through its application to three different cultures and, in each case, it proved effective. Therefore, the methodology should prove equally effective when applied to any culture and any mission. However, the methodology must be tested further by applying it to more cultures and more missions to be certain of this hypothesis. This would involve:
  - Templating more cultures. This would enhance and reinforce the applicability of the methodology particularly if the range were extended to cover cultures in groups not templated so far, such as an East Asian culture, a Central Asian culture, and an African culture. Apart from corroborating the utility of the methodology, the templates themselves would be of genuine value.

- Templating more missions, first the full range of Special Forces missions and then other, equally-critical Defense Department missions outside the Special Operations Forces community. In each case, a topic/mission element crosswalk could be developed that ties generic cultural topics to the mission elements. With this accomplished, any mission can then be compared with any templated culture to develop prioritized cultural communication skills.
- Another avenue worthy of consideration is development of the multi-dimensional automated template. As noted earlier, gender differences, differences between rural and urban outlooks, and differences between civil and military outlooks can modify the basic patterns within a given culture. Such differences can cause legitimate confusion as, for example, occurred regarding whether or not Levantine Arabs represented a culture different from the Gulf Arabs or when the Arab cultural informants tried to assess the very different degrees of negative impact that incorrect performance of the same behavior would have to a cosmopolitan Lebanese as opposed to a conservative Saudi. Such differences and, indeed, all of the issues noted in the footers currently contained in the generic cultural template could be accommodated in an automated multi-dimensional template.
- While created as tools to support systematic development of cultural communication skills training, the cultural templates appear to have much greater applications. Their application to a host of areas to support mission analysis, to provide a revised format for country studies, to provide self-study outlines (e.g., for foreign area officers, intelligence analysts, and Special Forces team members), to support psychological operations, to inform the design and content of foreign language training, and to inform the design and content of area studies training would be worthwhile pursuits.

With respect to behaviors and behavior weighting:

- The notional behaviors developed in the generic template could stand a more rigorous review. Particularly worthy of investigation is the process applied to identify culturalspecific behaviors.
- Behaviors were weighted in only one dimension. Although much more complex, a multidimensional weighting process, considering dimensions such as frequency and criticality, is worthy of consideration.
- Weighting could also be done in the context of learning objectives other than operational missions. For example, it is possible that there is a relationship between acquiring a foreign language and cultural skills and there is certainly a demand for improved cultural training during foreign language training.

The foregoing comments concern extending the work reported in this document. However, the project revealed other topics deserving attention:

• The impact of the cultures identified to be of operational relevance on current Special Forces organization and operational assignments, to include position coding, is worthy of study. For example, the Special Forces Group assigned to support the European Theater should maintain some degree of expertise regarding 133 cultures of operational relevance that fall into four very distinct cultural groups. But the Special Forces Group assigned to support Southern Command need maintain expertise concerning only 12 cultures of operational relevance that fall into three cultural groups. Nevertheless, the personnel authorizations are identical. The impact of this difference on training requirements, accuracy of position coding, and overall manpower authorizations could be investigated. Similarly, despite its geographic location, Haiti might more productively be linked to African cultures rather than Latin American cultures for operational and training purposes.

- Core cultures: The recent demise of the Soviet Union and increased emphasis on nationalism worldwide has increased the number of world cultures of operational relevance to the Special Forces. In turn, this has increased potential training requirements. However, particularly within the context of cultural communication skills training, application of the concept of "core cultures" may reduce the range of cultures for which the Special Forces must acquire and maintain expertise. The core culture concept is based on the idea that possessing cultural skills for one culture simplifies or facilitates the acquisition of skills in other, related cultures. If core cultures exist, soldiers conversant with the core culture could very quickly be trained in the specifics of one of the related cultures. Furthermore, the concept of core cultures could impact on the selection of foreign languages in which to maintain competence. A key point is that, to the extent that they may exist, core cultures might be very different from what superficially would be assumed. For example, instead of the Russian culture, the Turkish culture would appear to be a core culture to those cultures in Central Asia once subsumed within the Soviet Union but that now inform independent nation states.
- When examining the Russian and Cuban cultures, it was noted that some aspects of communist political, social, and economic organization tend to soften the intensity of the underlying cultural features. However, firm conclusions could not be drawn because only two such cultures were examined. Yet the possibility has considerable implications for the future. For example, as found during this project, Cuban culture today is very different from that existing prior to Fidel Castro Ruz and Russian culture will likely go in some new direction rather than return to its pre-communist roots. Where might Chinese culture go in the future?
- During the project it was frequently observed that U.S. soldiers often have a limited range of knowledge regarding their own culture, which complicates the process of teaching cultural skills. It is very difficult to acquire a perspective on another culture if you are not sufficiently familiar with your own. Although challenging, an American culture-specific template might provide valuable insights regarding a foundation for estimating cultural skills training requirements.

Conference Report

Conference of Culture Templates Raleigh, NC 27-29 February 1996

The working draft then current of the Generic Culture Template, the preliminary draft version of the "Arabs of West Asia" Culture Template, the draft FID Mission Template, and a notional amalgamation of the Generic Culture and FID Mission Templates were presented to leading scholars, specialists, and practitioners at the Conference on Culture Templates, held 27-29 February 1996 in Raleigh, North Carolina.

In attendance were:

- Outside subject-matter specialists: Dr. Aida Beshara (independent consultant), Prof. Miriam Cooke (Duke University Arabic Department), Mr. Randall Elliott (Chief of the Politico-Military Bureau, US Department of State), Prof. Margaret Nydell (Head of the Arabic Department, Georgetown University), Ambassador Richard Parker (Middle East Institute), GEN William Richardson (former TRADOC Commander), Dean Karin Ryding (Dean of Interdisciplinary Programs, Georgetown University), COL Vladimir Sobichevsky (former DLI Commandant), and Dr. Tim Wallace (North Carolina State University).
- Government participants: Mr. Robert Blakeney (SWCS), MAJ Norvell DeAtkine (SWCS), Dr. Melissa Holland (ARI), LTC Terry Potter (NDU), and LTC Peter Williams (SWCS).
- Project staff: Dr. Ellen Franke (AGSI), Mr. David Hannaman (HumRRO), LTC Peter Kozumplik (CWL&C), and LTC Chris Wise (CWL&C).

The conference objectives were to:

- Review the Generic Culture Template to confirm the concept and to improve its utility as an analytical tool.
- Review the "Arabs of West Asia" Culture Template to state critical communications skills and to formulate criteria for prioritizing those communications skills.
- Review the FID mission, the draft FID Mission Template, and the notional procedures to link cultural requirements and mission requirements through the Composite Template.

The first two sessions of the conference provided an overview of the project, a description of Special Operating Forces (SOF), and Special Forces (SF) missions and current training programs. Participants were then divided into two work groups which independently reviewed the draft Generic Culture Template. Each group independently concluded that the template is a useful and comprehensive approach to describing a culture. Beyond that, the group members identified some redundancy in the draft template, they added and deleted some topics, they reorganized and restated other topics, and they identified additional communications skills.

In the third and fourth conference sessions, the draft "Arabs of West Asia" Culture Template was introduced and then separately reviewed by the work groups. Skills associated with elements of the template were identified and the work groups modified proposed criteria for assessing the importance of those skills. The work groups provided editorial and substantive comments regarding the accuracy of the template in describing Arab culture. The discussions led to consideration of the various regional subsets of the culture and one group developed overall themes regarding Arab culture. Both groups contributed a significant number of skills to add to the template. A consensus was reached on two rating criteria: a) Will the behavior, if incorrectly done, cause offense? and b) will the behavior, if correctly done, elicit a positive response?

A persistent theme throughout the conference was the need to identify key features of American culture and to ensure that SF soldiers understood their own culture. Herein, it was noted that it could not be assumed that individual soldiers conform to US norms, hence the deletion of a criterion of "similarity to US behavior." One suggestion was to add a fourth category to the Generic Culture Template to describe US culture and behaviors; another was to template US culture independently.

The fifth session introduced the FID mission. Key points included in the original "read ahead" package regarding the FID mission were reviewed and revised FID Mission and Composite Templates were distributed.

The work groups were restructured for the sixth session to enable one group (generalists and military representatives) to review the mission and composite templates and another (Arab specialists and one SWCS instructor) to address the specific requirement in the FID Army Training and Evaluation Plan (ARTEP) that US soldiers must represent and comply with the US position on human rights. Herein:

- The human rights group was asked to identify culturally appropriate and effective methods to communicate US concerns to members of the Arab culture and to identify the cues or indicators within that culture that signal potential violations of US human rights expectations. This was accomplished with virtually complete consensus regarding appropriate themes and techniques of persuasion and with consensus regarding specific cues.
- Members of the mission group confirmed the importance of dealing with "non-duty" time, noting that many cross-cultural problems occur when the soldiers are not on duty. They also made recommendations for minor improvements in the template and they achieved consensus regarding process and content.

In the final session, each participant provided specific points for emphasis or revision from his or her own perspective. Both Professor Nydell and Ambassador Parker later expanded their oral comments with separately-submitted detailed and substantive written comments.

Preface to the Cultural Communication Skills Template — Generic

The Cultural Communication Skills Template — Generic was developed to provide a basis for systematic design of cultural training programs. Americans that need to interact with members of a culture other than their own will do their jobs better if they understand that culture. Cultural training programs thus aim to enhance the performance of an American within a target culture. But systematic approaches to the design of cultural-skills training have been unavailable. In general, training requirements are based on informal and subjective analysis of a culture. Consequently, the effectiveness of the resulting training is dependent on the intuition of training developers, training managers, and instructors.

The purpose of this Template is to organize cultural information for a specific purpose — the identification of specific cultural behaviors that make a difference and that can be taught. Identification is critically important; until a behavior can be described, nothing can be trained. The plethora of information about a target culture is of little practical use until the behaviors affected by the information can be described. Thus, we can know a great deal about a religion but, from a training perspective, we need to know how aspects of that religion affect behavior.

The Template provides a disciplined approach to collecting and organizing culture-specific information and identifying behaviors associated with that information. By itself, the Generic Template does not describe any specific culture. Rather, it focuses on what to look for and how to organize the information obtained from cultural informants, books, scholarly journals, magazine articles, and other sources in a manner that facilitates identification of specific behaviors linked to that information.

Development of the Template was very pragmatic. First, culture was defined as follows:

Culture is the set of traditional behaviors acquired through transmission from one generation to another within a discrete segment of the human race, sharing a racial or ethnic identity, a geographic location, a specified period of time, or any combination thereof.

From this definition, criteria were developed to begin describing specific cultures. These criteria were based strictly on how adequately they differentiated groups of human beings and whether they facilitated the identification of behaviors. Within this context, a structure was proposed, evaluated by expert opinion, and used to analyze specific cultures. Based on outcomes, the structure and content were re-evaluated and re-applied. The result, based on review of three cultures, is reflected in this volume.

The Template follows a traditional outlining format with three main sections and a hierarchy of sub-topics:

- I. Psychological Profile
- II. Shared History
- III. National/Regional Characteristics

Sections I and II enable description of a culture's key features. Section III reflects the acknowledgement that cultures exist at specific places and are linked to specific nationalities — both factors can affect or modify behavior.

As topics were organized and assimilated in this structure, generic cultural behaviors were identified and generally linked to fourth-level topic headings in the outline (e.g., I.A.1.a. or II.B.3.c.). These behaviors are intended to be cues or suggestions to assist the description of specific behaviors in a specific culture. In the Template the generic behaviors are indented, numbered and italicized. Though linked to the fourth-level topics, they are placed in the text following the complete topic hierarchy as a matter of convenience.

Appendix A reproduces the Template to the fourth level. In most cases, however, more elements exist in a hierarchy below the fourth-level. These amplify the topic and serve as additional cues to the search for and organization of culture-specific information.

Using The Template

The Template is a research guide that focuses a search through all of the information available on a culture. It also serves quite well as an interview protocol with experts and native informants. For each topic, informants are queried regarding key cultural information and, most importantly, about behaviors they have witnessed that are linked to that topic. The footer shown on each page has proved particularly useful when the Template is used in this role, since those queries tend to highlight gender, urban/rural, and other key differences within a topic domain.

Culture-Specific Templates

Using the same format, and often exactly the same topic headings, the intended result of the research is a culture-specific template with behaviors unique to the culture. Understanding, identifying, responding to, and perhaps performing, those behaviors is, in turn, the key to successful interaction with the culture.

The content of culture-specific templates differ from the Generic Template in several respects. They contain culture-specific topics and the cultural behaviors within them are described more acutely. For a given culture, some topics listed in the Generic Template may have no relevance at all within the target culture and might be eliminated. In particular, Section III of a culture-specific template may expand considerably if several countries are identified, or may shrink when national boundaries are considered less germane to the analysis.

Future Editions Of The Template

The Template is a living document. Although demonstrably useful in its present form, it would be surprising if the Template did not evolve as it is tested against other cultures. However, at all times the focus will be on ensuring its utility to the decision-maker and training manager.

Workshop Instructions for Phases I, II, and III

(Note: Alternative wordings are shown in brackets)

Phase I Introduction

U.S. military personnel may be living and working in "West Asia" ["Russia", "Cuba"] and interacting with the Arab [Russian, Cuban] culture of that area (i.e., Saudi Arabia, Yemen, Oman, UAE, Qatar, Bahrain, Kuwait, Iraq, Syria, Lebanon, Israel, Jordan). Assume that they are there at the invitation of the host government. As official, invited travelers, some aspects of their visit are different from the average traveler or tourist, to include:

They are in the region to do a specific job.

They are there as a group, not individuals.

They are there because their higher command ordered them there.

They are under very specific legal and diplomatic control.

Using the scale below, please rate the impact of American soldiers not properly demonstrating each of the cultural communication skills or behaviors, (identified on the attached list) when interfacing with indigenous people. For example, if an American soldier ignores, or improperly executes a behavior, and doing so would have an extremely negative impact on his relationship with a member of the culture, that behavior would get the highest rating, i.e., a "7." If ignoring, or improperly executing a behavior would have minimal or no impact at all, the behavior would get a lower rating, even as low as "1." Your ratings should be based on the interactions between U.S. military personnel and the indigenous population (both military and civilian), with no regard to the rank of the military personnel involved (either U.S. and non-U.S.) or status/social standing of the local people except as noted in some of the items.

Rating Scale

Not properly demonstrating the behavior when interacting with indigenous people would have the following effect:

1 =No Impact (Not properly demonstrating the behavior would have no impact.)

2 = Little Negative Impact

3 = Some Negative Impact (Not properly demonstrating the behavior may cause embarrassment or upset indigenous people to a minor degree for a short period of time, but would not effect interrelationships.)

4 = Moderate Negative Impact

5 = Considerable Negative Impact (Not properly demonstrating the behavior may temporarily disrupt relationships.)

6 = Very Negative Impact

7 = Extremely Negative Impact (Not properly demonstrating the behavior may cause a total breakdown in rapport/collaboration that could result in total alienation or physical strife.)

Phase II Workshop Instructions

Based on the data obtained in the Phase I workshops, several clusters of items have been identified. (A cluster of items is defined as items who received ratings during the Phase I workshops that were NOT substantially different from each other.) The purpose of the Phase II workshop is to attempt to "un-cluster" the clustered items.

During this workshop base your ratings on the same context you used in Phase I:

U.S. military personnel may be living and working in "West Asia" ["Russia", "Cuba"] and interacting with the Arab [Russian, Cuban] culture. Assume that they are there at the invitation of the host government. As official, invited travelers, some aspects of their visit are different from the average traveler or tourist, to include:

During Phase II, rather than rating the effect of not properly demonstrating the behavior (as you did in Phase I), you will be making "forced choices" in this workshop. In other words, you will be rating the effect of not demonstrating a behavior in relation to other behaviors in the same cluster using the following scale:

Not properly demonstrating the behavior when interacting with indigenous people would have the following effect:

1 = Less Impact Than Other Behaviors in the Cluster 7 = More Impact Than Other Behaviors in the Cluster

For each cluster, the directions will specify the minimum number of behaviors that must be assigned to each point on the scale. It is very important that you follow the directions!!

Phase III Workshop Instructions

Based on the data obtained in the Phase II workshops, several clusters of items have been identified. (A cluster of items is defined as items who received ratings during the Phase II workshops that were NOT substantially different from each other.) The purpose of the Phase III workshop is to attempt to "un-cluster" the clustered items. During this workshop clustered items will be discussed by the group with the group with the intent of rank ordering them. The majority decision will rule when there is disagreement regarding rank ordering clustered items. If there would be different reactions to the behavior in different countries, base your decisions on the worst case scenario.

During this workshop base your ratings on the same context you used in Phases I and II:

U.S. military personnel may be living and working in "West Asia" ["Russia", "Cuba"] and interacting with the Arab [Russian, Cuban] culture. Assume that they are there at the invitation of the host government. As official, invited travelers, some aspects of their visit are different from the average traveler or tourist, to include:

During Phase III, you will again be making "forced choices". In other words, you will be ranking the impact of not demonstrating a behavior in relation to other behaviors in the same cluster. The 76 clusters range in size from 2-4 behaviors. The group will be asked to identify the behavior that has the most impact first.

Mission Element Weighting

Weighting FID Mission Elements

The North Carolina Center for World Languages & Cultures is under contract to the US Army Research Institute to develop methods to improve cultural communications skills in Special Operations Forces. Part of that project is analyzing individual cultures to identify specific cultural communications skills. The mission to be performed is crucial to the process of selecting which skills should be trained.

General mission considerations for Special Operating Forces include the following:

- They are in the region to do a specific job
- They are there as a group, not individuals
- They are there because their higher command ordered them there
- They are under very specific legal and diplomatic control

A specific culture has been identified and a prioritized list of cultural communications skills has been developed. A specific mission has also been identified — an A Detachment on a Foreign Internal Defense Mission — and all aspects of the FID mission as described in the Mission Training Plan are to be considered.

Using the ARTEP for FID, with the assistance of subject matter experts, key FID mission elements have been identified. Recognizing that every mission element cannot be equally important to overall mission success, participants are asked to weight these mission elements. The results will be used to prioritize cultural communications skills training requirements.

FID Mission Elements

Seven mission elements have been identified. For each element key sub-elements have also been identified. All of the elements except for #7 are based on the ARTEP. Note that mission support sub-elements include to host nation interface concerns.

Weighting UW Mission Elements

The North Carolina Center for World Languages & Cultures is under contract to the US Army Research Institute to develop methods to improve cultural communications skills in Special Operation Forces. Part of that project is analyzing individual cultures to identify specific cultural communications skills. The mission to be performed is crucial to the process of selecting which skills should be trained.

General mission considerations for Special Operating Forces include the following:

- They are there because their higher command ordered them there
- They are under very specific legal and diplomatic control

A specific culture has been identified and a prioritized list of cultural communications skills has been developed. A specific mission has also been identified — an A detachment on an unconventional warfare (UW) mission — and all aspects of the UW mission as described in supporting doctrinal publications are to be considered.

Using FM 100-25, ARTEP 31-807-30-MTP, and the Joint Special Operations Awareness Program (JSOAP) Reference Manual, and with the assistance of subject matter experts, key UW mission elements have been identified. Recognizing that every mission element cannot be equally important to overall mission success, participants are asked to weight these mission elements. The results will be used to prioritize cultural communications skills training requirements.

APPENDIX P

Composite Template

Objective

Having examined both the culture and the mission independently, the objective was to bring both together to determine what cultural behaviors were relevant to successful performance of what mission elements.

Method

The method used was to compare each topic and behavior contained in the draft Cultural Communication Skills Template: Arabs of West Asia with each mission element in the draft Foreign Internal Defense Mission Template to assess the relevance of the specific cultural behaviors to the tasks required by the specific mission element.

Procedures

This methodology was tested by developing a notional composite template in which an early draft of the generic culture template was amalgamated with the initial draft foreign internal defense mission template. This notional composite template was presented to mission experts during a conference (refer to Appendix D for the conference report). These experts concurred with the procedures to be used.

The composite template combining the foreign internal defense mission with the Arabs of West Asia culture was similarly formed by merging the topics and behaviors contained in the revised draft Cultural Communication Skills Template: Arabs of West Asia into the elements of the revised Foreign Internal Defense Mission Template. Following the procedures tested before the conference and confirmed by the mission experts, a complete culture template was added to each of the 23 discrete subelements of the mission template. Then, looking independently at each subelement of the mission template, each topic in the culture template was assessed to determine if it was relevant to that specific mission subelement. In this process:

- If the cultural topic was assessed as germane to those tasks associated with that discrete mission subelement, the topic and all of its associated behaviors were left with that subelement.
- If the cultural topic was assessed as irrelevant to the tasks associated with that mission subelement, both the topic and all behaviors associated with it were deleted from that mission subelement.

After deletion of irrelevant topics and associated behaviors, the remaining behaviors were assessed, one by one, to confirm that they were relevant to the tasks required by the specific mission subelement. No attempt was made to assess the importance of individual behaviors; the issue was merely the relevance of the behaviors to the mission subelements.

Results

The ultimate outcome was a draft Cultural Communication Skills Template: Foreign Internal Defense — Arabs of West Asia that pertains only to a foreign internal defense mission to be performed somewhere within the cultural region inhabited by the Arabs of West Asia. As such, the applicability of this template is very specific. However, more specificity regarding the parameters of the mission or the country in which it would be performed would necessarily engender template modifications.

Weighting Skills by Mission Elements

Method

The methodology involved combining the weights assigned to the skills with the weights assigned to the mission elements.

Procedures

For the purposes of this project, it was decided that cultural behaviors and mission elements would carry equal weights. Other determinations of the relative importance of cultural skills and mission elements might be appropriate. However, although the results would change, the methodology would not.

As rated, mission element values ranged from 0 to 20.99 while the cultural skills values varied in range only from 1 to 7. Therefore, the investigators decided to divide each mission weighting score by three before adding it to the cultural skills score to develop the final score.

With the weighting decision made, each mission element of the composite template was examined for the occurrence or non-occurrence of a cultural skill. If a skill appeared under that mission element, it was judged a "hit" for that mission element and the weighting value for that mission element was entered into the table following this discussion. Weights for each behavior were then summed to establish a weighting for each skill within the context of the mission.

Results

The outcome was a listing of cultural behaviors pertaining to the Arabs of West Asia culture prioritized within the specific context of the foreign internal defense mission.

As might be expected, the weighted cultural skills clustered into 43 different groupings ranging from a group of 109 that "hit" in all seven mission elements to a group of 3 that did not appear in any mission element. More than 50% of the skills appear in the top ten rankings. This skewed distribution may be taken as an indicator of the importance of cultural concerns that influence accomplishment foreign internal defense missions within the Arabs of West Asia culture.

APPENDIX Q

FID Topic/Mission Worksheet

INSTRUCTIONS TO RATERS

You have been selected to participate in this project based on your appreciation and understanding of how cultural issues can affect successful mission accomplishment. Your task is to assess the relevance of key aspects of any culture to key elements of the foreign internal defense (FID) mission. To accomplish this task, you have copies of a Topic/Mission Worksheet to record your responses as well as copies of the Generic Culture Template and the FID Mission Template for reference.

The FID Mission Template describes the FID mission. Key elements of that mission are noted in bold type and are repeated as the seven columns on the right of the Topic Assessment Worksheet.

The Generic Culture Template is a detailed topic outline of the elements of any culture. An extract of this document — down to the fourth level of the Template's outline — is duplicated in the first column of the Topic/Mission Worksheet.

PROCEDURES

In the Topic/Mission Worksheet, use your expertise and judgement to assess whether a cultural topic on the left axis is (or can be) relevant to successful performance of each of the mission elements. Record each positive response with an "x" at the intersection between the cultural topic and the mission element. Leave the box blank for a negative response. To assist in your judgements, refer to the Mission and Generic Templates that describe the contexts for each item to be rated.

For example, in assessing how culture interacts with the FID mission, you might determine that "naming conventions" (topic I.B.1.a. from the Generic Culture Template) is relevant to the "advise and assist," the "train," the "command, control, and communications," and the "intelligence and security," elements of the FID mission. At the same time, you might determine that "naming conventions" are irrelevant to the "logistics" element of the FID mission. In this instance, you would leave the "logistics" box blank and record an "x" in each of the remaining boxes.

Similarly, you might determine that "hierarchy of merit" (topic III.E.1.b.) is relevant only to the "intelligence and security" element of the FID mission. In this instance, you would record an "x" in only that box and you would leave the rest of the boxes blank.

UW Topic/Mission Worksheet

INSTRUCTIONS TO RATERS

You have been selected to participate in this project based on your appreciation and understanding of how cultural issues can affect successful mission accomplishment. Your task is to assess the relevance of key aspects of any culture to key elements of the unconventional warfare (UW) mission. To accomplish this task, you have copies of a Topic/Mission Worksheet to record your responses as well as copies of the Generic Culture Template and the UW Mission Template for reference.

The UW Mission Template describes the UW mission. Key elements of that mission are noted in bold type and are repeated as the six columns on the right of the Topic Assessment Worksheet.

The Generic Culture Template is a detailed topic outline of the elements of any culture. An extract of this document — down to the fourth level of the Template's outline — is duplicated in the first column of the Topic Assessment Worksheet.

PROCEDURES

In the Topic/Mission Worksheet, use your expertise and judgement to assess whether a cultural topic on the left axis is (or can be) relevant to successful performance of each of the mission elements. Record each positive response with an "x" at the intersection between the cultural topic and the mission element. Leave the box blank for a negative response. To assist in your judgements, refer to the Mission and Generic Templates that describe the contexts for each item to be rated.

For example, in assessing how culture interacts with the unconventional warfare (UW) mission, you might determine that "naming conventions" (topic I.B.1.a. from the Generic Culture Template) is relevant to the "advise and assist," the "train," the "command, control, and communications," the "intelligence and security," and the "psychological operations" elements of the UW mission. At the same time, you might determine that "naming conventions" are irrelevant to the "logistics" element of the UW mission. In this instance, you would leave the "logistics" box blank and record an "x" in each of the remaining boxes.

Similarly, you might determine that "hierarchy of merit" (topic III.E.1.b.) is relevant only to the "intelligence and security" and the "psychological operations" elements of the UW mission. In this instance, you would record an "x" in each of these two boxes and you would leave the rest of the boxes blank.
